EXPLANATION OF AND RATIONALE FOR PROPOSED CHANGE (CONT'D)

Adding Accounting Information Systems (AIS) to the core. AIS has evolved to become a required core accounting course at most institutions. Adding AIS to our core will require students to understand the various transaction processes that are relevant to a company's financial information, and how such processes are documented and utilized in the production of financial statements. A portion of this class will introduce students to the various information technologies available for transaction processing.

Eliminating Advanced Financial Accounting from the core. Advanced Financial Accounting might more accurately be described as a "special topics" course in accounting, which covers consolidated financial statements, foreign currency translations and transactions, and accounting for derivatives. While important, these special topics are not considered integral to a broad based accounting education. Most institutions do not require Advanced Financial Accounting as a core requirement.

Competitive Admission. Due to intense demand for the Accounting Option and the desire to insure graduates of the highest caliber, admission to the option will be competitive based on academic record.
