EXPLANATION OF AND RATIONALE FOR PROPOSED CHANGE

For new program, please include any relevant supporting documentation such as student learning outcomes, projected enrollments, letters of support and departmental handouts. (Use additional pages if necessary).

The aim of our proposed minor in "History of War and Society" is to better showcase the depth of comparative fields that History offers and to dismantle student ideas that History is bound only by time and location. We identified this theme after careful consultation with faculty about the courses (especially at the upper-division level) they teach and, thus, are confident that we have sufficient courses to support this and our three other proposed minors.

The student learning outcomes for our proposed new minors include:

- deepen intellectual coherence of History minors' courses of study;
- strengthen skills of critical analysis, synthesis, and written and oral expression by encouraging comparison, contrast, and connection of historical issues across diverse time periods and geographic locations;
- develop greater appreciation for the variety of methodologies and theories that historians use to interpret the past; and
- enhance understanding of the diversity and complexity of the human past to prepare students for careers and citizenship in an increasingly globalized world.

Please see attached sheets for description of the "History of War and Society" minor, and approved course list for this proposed minor.

Minor in History of War and Society

This minor explores experiences of civil and international wars as a means to question how violence, conflict, and other traumatic acts have shaped political, social, and cultural formations in the past and present. In addition to military history, courses in this minor examine the following aspects of war's linkage to society: how the experiences and exigencies of war create conditions for broader changes, including changes in notions of territorial integrity, sovereignty, national belonging, citizenship, gender, and race, as people are called to serve in battle zones and on the home front; how war fractures social and national cohesion; how the techniques and technologies of war propel new developments in national and regional security arrangements and transform economic, military, and political institutions; how major wars affect geopolitics and ideological conflicts; how wars and war experiences are represented in historical narratives and commemorated and remembered at the national, local, and individual levels; how questions of violence, trauma, reconciliation, and peace are dealt with in different societies.
